ment will be made simultaneously with the proposal of coercion. The land bill cannot be ready by the opening of Parliament, but a declaration of its leading principles will then be made. We believe the fixity of tenure will be one of the chief proposals of the Government. The resolution to introduce the coercion bill as soon as Parliament meets does not exclude a recourse to extraordinary powers before then if necessary."

The Press Association says it learns that arrangements are making to send 5,000 men to Ireland if necessary. The Press Association is informed that the Irish magistrates, reply to Mr. Forster's circular expressed the opinion that they would be unable to carry out the provisions of the circular. Mr. Forster therefore told his colleagues
